The office of secretary of state killed John Hay. He died at a time when he should be enjoying life, and yet many of us envy men in such high places. where they sacrifice life for work.

The sewers of Xenia were flushed the other day with hundreds of barrels of beer, notwithstanding that city is a "dry" town, and hydrant water plentigovernment inspector to a brewery. The owners preferred to forfeit the beer rather than pay the required government tax thereon.

Former Senator Nicholas of Clermont county is being discussed as the propable chairman of the new Democratic state executive committee, although many of the friends of Harvey C. Garber, present state chairman, say all. that Garber may have the place if he wants it. Garber, through his intimate knowledge of the state organization, was largely instrumental in building up the Pattison organization, which won the nomination.

It is a safe proposition to state that never in the history of Ohio politics were so many preachers and church and religious workers seen in a state convention, both as delegates and specattors. A Columbus minster, who had occasion to call upon a number of Columbus preachers on the day of the Democratic convention said that he had arrived off that harbor on Sunday. was unable to find a single minister at home. In every instance he was told that the man he was looking for was at the Democratic convention.

At the recent meeting of the supreme council of the order of United Commercial Travelers of America, at Columbus. Supreme Counselor Morris handed down some important decisions of interest to the order. Chief among these were that dealers in rags, wool and hides are eligible to membership in the order and also lumber dealers. He, however, declared against newspaper men in circulation department and grain buyers. He held that Japanese were not eligible to membership in the order, the constitution providing that only white men should be taken into membership. He also declared against the holding of street fairs under the auspices of local councils.

Teachers and the Schools convention at Put-in-Bay was outspoken in a number of reforms in the schools. A report from the Ohio College Association, recommending a bill for the outbreak, has gone in the diwhich would provide for a state council rection of Roumania in command of of education that would be representative of the various educational institutions of the state, the members of the council to be appointed by the governor, was presented. This council was to be empowered to supervise all teachers' examinations throughout the state. The report was referred to the legislative committee.

The legislative report said: "The new school code is a half-baked cake. lacking strength, logic, good diction and continuity. Yet it has elements of power and growth which will finally stand for a better school system for Ohio. The superintendent who is such through merit should receive his commission from the state and be unimpaired by local conditions. One-man power is the only power upon which to center responsibility." The report said, further, than the section regarding the examination of teachers was faulty, narrow and non-professional; that the section legislating superintendents and teachers out of office in August, 1905, was harmful, unjust and absolutely without excuse, except, perhaps, on a constitutional basis; that the section terminating the tenure of office of all members of boards of education January 1 was unfortunate, as it gave many districts inexperienced boards; that the lack of instruction defining the duties of superintendents, principals and teachers was to be regretted.

We Are All Familiar with the deep, hoarse bark, grimly called "a grave-yard cough." It is the cry of the torture I lungs for mercy. Give them mercy in the form of Allen's Lung Balsam, a remedy for pulmonary trouble, so highly esteemed that it is recommended even in the early stages of con-sumption. In the later stages mortal skill is unavailing. Nobody can afford to neglect a cold.

The Kniaz Potemkine hoisted the red flag and made seaward at full speed and anchored in the roads opposite the offices of the volunteer fleet. The squadron thereupon steamed off

The mutinous ship broke through the encircling vessels and steamed into the harbor, anchoring almost in her former position. The vessels of the squadron remained until evening in the opposite side of the harbor and signals were again exchanged. In the morning the Potemkine advanced toward the ful. bor.

The proclamation attached to the body of the Potemkine's sailor, Omiltchuk, at Odessa, the text of which was received Sunday, confirms the authorities' statement that the revolt was planned. The proclamation terminated with the slogan of the social revolutionary party; "All for one and one for

NEWS STILL INDEFINITE.

London, July 3 .- Although 48 hours have passed since the first conflicting stories came filtering through from Odessa, many by way of St. Petersburg. that the rebel warship Potemkine had surrendered to the Black Sea fleet, and again that she had not surrendered and had been joined by another ship, definite and correct information on the situation seems to be still lacking here. A dispatch from Odessa yesterday afternon stated that the two rebellious warships were still in the harbor.

Later in the day Lloyds' agent at Kustendji wired that the Potemkine, accompanied by a torpedo destroyer, The report added that a steamer appeared off the harbor after the Potemkine had entered and came to an anchor and seemed to be watching the movements of the rebel ship.

Kustendji is on the coast of Roumania, more than 100 miles south of Lloyds' information is rarely incorrect, and his agent reporting the rebel ship a hundred miles from Odessa, where she had been reported as being captured, and again as having successfully overawed the Black Sea fleet sent to capture her, makes the gaining of a knowledge of the true state of affairs a monumental task for those outside the inner circle of officialdom in Russia.

CONDITIONS ARE WORSE.

London, July 3 .- The St. Petersburg correspondent of the London Times, cabling Sunday night, says:

"The situation at Odessa is changing with kaleidoscopic suddenness, but not for the better. The town and port are quiet for the present and the resistance of the workingmen has been crushed by an overwhelming force of troops, but the utmost panic prevails, Citizens are fleeing and foreigners are preparing to embark on beard for some other place where their lives "In the meanwhile, the Kniaz Potemkine, which was chiefly responsible a staff of civilians, who are understood to be representatives of a revolutionary organization.

LAY IT TO LIQUOR.

"From the words of a high official, I gather that everything is being done to avoid extreme measures in the hope that the mutineers will submit and thereby enable the government to place its own construction upon what has happened. The explanation is already volunteered in official quarters that the crews revolted while under the influence of liquor.

"The mystery of the squadron's action in returning to Sevastopol instead of remaining off Odessa or Nikolaieffe, where its presence would have assured the protection of shipping, is thought to be explained by the admiral's apprehension of further disaffection. Such is the version given in a telegram shown to me.

"The decision to go to Sevastopol was, it is said, prompted by the desire to place the warships within range of the forts and shore batteries, so that they could not join the mutineers.

PLANS NOT DECIDED.

London, July 3.-The Kustendjo (Roumania) corerspondent of the London Daily Mail, in a dispatch published in that paper's second edition this morning, states that when the Russian battleship Kniaz Potemkine arrived there she fired the customary salutes The commander of the Roumania navy boarded her and was received with the usual honors by a deputation of sailors. No officers were visible.

The sailors stated that their future plans were not yet decided upon. They asked to be allowed to purchase provisions and to take water, and this was allowed, they paying for the provisions in Russian gold. The Russian gunboat Pzesonape is also in the harbor, but has made no attempt to communicate with the Potemkine. Another warship made her appearance off the harbor Sunday night, but a rain and dust storm prevented her being recognized. She subsequently disappeared,
